The Intuitive Connection

I See Dead People (And Other Scary Things)... An Animal's Perspective

"The scary man is back!" When that's the first thing you hear while doing an animal communication, you know it's going to be one of "those" readings. My mind starts racing. How am I going to tell the guardian their animal sees "dead people." What will they think? How will they react? Will they believe me or think I'm totally crazy? Those are the kinds of thoughts that run through my head when this situation occurs, and it occurs more often than you realize. I hold my breath, calm my voice, and in the most gentle way possible, break the news.

Besides the dead, yes, fairies, dragons, and other entities (some not so friendly) also exist. Many animals (not all) can see them. It can be very scary. The entities appear very solid, and many times the animal can't distinguish between a solid living person and a dead one, as they look the same.

In most cases, the entity, especially if it is someone that has passed, is not intentionally trying to scare or harm the animal. They are engaging with the animal, because the animal can see them when no one else can. Think of it this way, you go on a vacation to a foreign country. You are in the middle of a strange place, you don't read the language, and you can't communicate with anyone because nobody speaks your language. What would be your reaction if you found one person that did? Do you think you might latch onto them and follow them everywhere, because now you have someone that you can communicate with? It's kind of like that for dead people.

The good news is there is a solution. Not only do I get to help the animal, but I also get to help the dead by helping them to move into the light and cross over. If it happens to be another type of entity, especially if there is no intent to harm involved, many times a simple conversation with the entity can resolve the issue. We have fairies in our house/property. They are playful, sometimes mischievous, but never harmful. When we first brought our dog Monte home, the fairies were so excited and wanted to play with him. They would tap his butt, and he would jump and spin as if an unseen force just nipped him. Although they meant no harm, he was clearly bothered by their playful activity. In a polite and respectful way, I asked them to please stop, and explained that he wasn't used to them and what they were doing was really bothering him, even though I knew they didn't mean to hurt him. The activity immediately stopped, and all was right in the house again.

Occasionally, there have been a few entities who were being intentionally harmful to the animal. When that happens, the "momma bear" in me comes out, and I won't stand for it. Thankfully I have lots of help, if needed, and I can call upon my guides, angels, allies, and my faith to remove the entity. Luckily, these types of situations are rare.

So how can you tell if your animal is seeing entities? Every animal will react different, but here are some signs to look for:

1. Sudden onset of fear (with no apparent reason why)
2. Intently staring at a spot (nothing appears to be there)
3. Barking, whining, growling, hissing at a spot (nothing appears to be there)
4. Suddenly flinching, as if being touched (when nothing is around)
5. Excited, playful behavior, as if reacting to an invisible friend/playmate

I would be remiss in my duties if I failed to mention that there is probably a logical explanation for the sudden change in behavior in most cases. Not everything is a paranormal encounter. Animal's sense of smell, sound and sight is much more sensitive than a human's. For example, if you notice your cat staring at a spot on the wall, watching intently, you might want to get a little closer. My cat can pick out the smallest bug on the wall, which I can't see unless I'm almost on top of it. Maybe your dog is suddenly fixated on the bathroom, and begins barking and whining. What your ears can't hear is the small leak in the pipe, which is causing a high-pitch frequency as air passes through it. Or maybe your dog begins shaking uncontrollably and wants to be held non-stop. This doesn't mean there is a ghost in the room, it could actually be a pain response, which needs to be checked by a vet. I'm simply saying that you should rule out all logical possibilities first, plus trust your own gut reaction. If you can't find a logical explanation, especially if you feel something is not right, it might be time to bring in an animal communicator.

For those animals that do see entities, sometimes just explaining what is happening is enough to make the animal feel comfortable. For others, they might need a little more assistance to feel safe. You can try using sage and smudging your space and/or animal. Or put a protective barrier around them (imagine placing them inside a protective shield or bubble that nothing can penetrate). If you're not the imaginative type, there are also some protective stones that you can put on your pet's collar, such as Kunzite, Petalite, Selenite and Black Tourmaline that help keep entities away. There are also lots of oils that have calming properties to help keep your animal's stress level down: Arborvitae, Basil, Bergamot, Clary Sage, Frankincense, Lavender, Patchouli, Roman Chamomile, Vetiver, Ylang Ylang and Serenity (Calming Blend). Please note, not all oils are safe for all types of animals, so make sure to ask which oil would be the best option. You can also tell the entity to stop bothering your animal and to leave your property (your house, your rules). Ultimately, you know your animal and what's best for them, and I'm only a phone call away if you need help.
